Dear Readers:

The Richmond Journal of Law and Technology is proud to present the fourth issue of the 2009–2010 academic year. In this issue, we explore the ever expanding duties of counsel responsible for electronically stored information, the application of 3D imaging technology to improve arson investigation, and the need for expanding copyright protection over the lawless Darknet.

As in years past, the success of the Journal has been dependent on the efforts of our staff. I would like to recognize this year's staff for their tenacity and hard work, especially that of our editorial board. In particular, I would like to recognize the efforts and patience of our administrative board. Under their leadership the Journal published four issues and hosted a well attended symposium.

On behalf of the entire 2009-2010 Journal staff, I extend our deepest gratitude and sincerest thanks for your continued readership. The Journal also appreciates the continuing support and assistance of the faculty and staff at the University of Richmond School of Law, most especially the guidance we receive from our faculty advisors, Professors Melanie Holloway and Jim Gibson.

We are confident you will enjoy our fourth issue. As always, your comments and suggestions are welcome at jolt@richmond.edu.

I would be remiss not to give a nod to our founder, Rick Klau. I am proud to say that the Journal remains one of the top ranked online law journals. Thank you for following your passion to create the first exclusively online journal. I am certain that you have been an inspiration to each of the more than 250 staff members over the past fifteen years. Here's to the future!

Best regards,
